The Myth: The medieval Church burned thousands of women for being "witches," and beheadings were a common way to deal with common criminals. The Truth: The "Witch Fad" did not happen during the Middle Ages. The craze took its peak during the 16th and 17th centuries, so it belongs to the early Modern era.

Five Absurd Myths about the Middle Ages - History

The myth that people were "old" in their 30s and 40s is understandable. After all, the Middle Ages were a time period of high infant and childbirth mortality rates, large numbers of young men off dying in battles, and the Black Death or plague, which killed tens of millions in Europe. But that didn't mean there were no elderly people.
