This is a collection of George Saunder's non-fiction and humor pieces. The Braindead Megaphone is an essay on our political discourse and is easily the weakest one of the bunch. Political blogs are handling that issue better with more journalist chops, but his metaphors are funny. The other essays are travel essays, and the Dubai essay is hilarious.

The title essay of George Saunders' The Braindead Megaphone invites the reader to imagine a person at a party with a megaphone. Megaphone Guy might not have much to say, but he's got a megaphone and so he is heard, his utterances setting the agenda for the entire party, the party's collective intelligence (its crowd-like wisdom if you want to put it that way) determined by the intelligence of Megaphone Guy.

The Braindead Megaphone George Saunders' main argument in The Braindead Megaphone is that the news media today is like a man at a party with a megaphone. He describes the man who has the megaphone as not the smartest, articulate, or most experienced, but since he has a megaphone people at the party are basically forced to listen to him speak.
